Evergreen News Events

Evergreen, Jan. 28.- Sunday was the regular monthly preaching day at Evergreen Baptist church, and as usual, there was a large crowd, but not quite so many because of the inclement weather, and the influenza epidemic that has been raging for weeks.

Our preacher's subject was "The Defense Program;" not the national defense that one reads so much about in the papers, and which, it seems, will take all the money in the world, but a Spiritual Defense, which, the preacher said was being sadly neglected. As is usually the case since our present pastor took charge, there were many visitors present Sunday, some from a long distance.

Sunday's snow fall was the first of the present winter, and though much of it melted as it fell there is some of it here this (Tuesday) morning.

Most of those who were sick last week are improving. Some have returned to work after a slight illness, while others are slowly convalescing.

Some of those who called at "Westside" Sunday to see Mrs. Carlene Farrar, sick with influenza, were: Rev. C. A. Collins, Jr. and Mrs. Collins, Mrs D A Conner and son, Sidney, of Appomattox, Mr. and Mrs. Will Garrett and family, and P. W. Coleman.

For some time I have been taking my paper (The Times Virginian), to a good neighbor, who like many families prefers to be financially unable to take the county paper. She always enjoys reading it so much, and she sent the last one to her son, who lives in a distant city. It seems that I failed to send her the January 16th paper, but along with my last week's paper, I included one dated January 18, 1940. She said: "I don't care how stale the news, I enjoy reading it just the same, though it seemed to be a year old to the day. Shs thought I h a d mistaken the year old paper for the current issue. So, perhaps we should save our papers after we have read them, they would make interesting reading in the years to come.

'Emerald Isle' of Ireland Noted for Green Foliage

Among the islands of the world, Ireland ranks high in public interest. It is not the largest but it is the homeland of the Irish people and that has set it apart in the minds of men.

Ireland is nearly the same size as the State of Maine. It is not much more than one-third as large as the nearby island of Great Britain.

If Ireland had as many people per square mile as Great Britain, it would have a population of more than 16,000,000. As it is, the population is less than 4,500,000.

An old name for Ireland is "Emerald Isle." This name refers to the fact that the island is extremely rich in plant life, with green grass, shrubs, and trees. An emerald is green, and so is Ireland. An Irish poet, Dr. William Drennan, is believed to have been the first to use the term "Emerald Isle," when he composed a poem about a century and a half ago.

Other names for Ireland are "Erin" and "Eire." They are two forms of the same name.

"Eire" is pronounced "Aireh." It is used as an official name for the part of Ireland governed directly by the Irish Free State. It includes all of Ireland except six counties in the north.

At the start of the European war, Eire declared herself "neutral."

Northern Ireland, on the other hand, stood by Great Britain from the outbreak of warfare. The people were firmly for the British in their fight against Hitler.

Cartel is Monopoly

A cartel is a combination of industrial or business enterprises engaged in the same work for the purpose of attaining monopolistic control of the market, prices, production or patents. Each company retains its own identity and freedom of action except in the matters to which the common agreement may refer. Cartels may be national or international in scope. They are comparable to the great industrial holding companies organized in the United States.

The first cartel was organized in Germany (1862) by six firms that were at that time the only producers of tinned metal sheets in Germany. The earliest conspicuously successful one was the "Irma" or International Rail Makers' association, organized in 1883. These organizations came very much to the fore in 1926-27, when they were considered a symbol of Europe resentment against the American economic position in Europe and a weapon to fight the big industrial combines of the United States.

'Gunmen' Were Indian Warriors

"Gunmen" originally were not hoodlums but Indian warriors. The 1750 vintage gunman was mentioned in the Georgia Colonial Record: "A small party of Indians, consisting of one chief, six gunmen and a woman come here this day." By 1818 "gunmen" were cavalrymen; in the Congressional Debates, Andrew Jackson is recorded as seeking "one regiment of mounted gunmen" to put down an Indian uprising. The word did not carry the stigma of an outlaw until 1865, according to the new American English dictionary of the University of Chicago Press, and even then it designated the desperados of the Wild West. The first use of the word in its present sense, the dictionary shows, was in 1916, when Carl Sandburg wrote: "I have seen the gunmen kill and go free to kill again."

War Changes Reading Preferences in Canada

The war has not only colored the thoughts of the citizens but has exerted a tremendous influence on their reading habits, it has been disclosed in the report of the Toronto Public libraries.

Books most in favor in the non-fiction category are those dealing with some phase of world affairs having a direct bearing on political, economic and military problems, asin.

A newcomer to the ranks of non-fiction's best read books is "Canada: America's Problem," by John MacCormac, New York newspaper man. It ranked second. Oscar Levant's "A Smattering of Ignorance" ranked third.

Next in order of popularity were the old favorite, Hitler's "Mein Kampf," ranked fourth; Beverly Baxter's "Men, Martyrs and Mountebanks," seventh in the list; "The Lights Go Down," by Erika Mann and "Hitler Speaks," by Herman Rauschning.

Favorite works of fiction were headed by Richard Llewellyn's "How Green Was My Valley." Next in order of popularity were "Gone My Captain Waila," by Evelyn Eaton; "Kitty Foyle," by Christopher Morley; "This and Dust Thereon, Too," by Rachel Field and "Night in Bombay," by Louis Bromfield.

Vet Cemeteries

The United States has established six cemeteries in France, the jurisdiction of which was placed under the American Battle Monuments commission pursuant to an executive order of February 26, 1934. The manner in which those cemeteries were obtained is as follows:

"The Somme, Oise-Aisne, St. Mihiel, Aisne-Marne, and ground for the entrance of Suresnes cemetery were established under an agreement between the United States and the French government which granted perpetual use of the grounds for burial purposes to the United States, for which the United States paid a stipulated price."

Winter Heating, Summer Cooling

Indicative of the trend toward the unit type of winter and summer air-conditioning equipment is the recent announcement that a number of manufacturers now offer cabinets, comparable in size to radiators, which provide complete winter conditioning and are also capable of providing summer cooling and dehumidification.

The same unit heats the room in winter and cools it in summer. Winter heating is done by means of hot water or steam piped to the unit. In the summer, cold water, flowing through the same pipes, circulates in the coils in the cabinet.

The unit is equipped with a fan to provide rapid circulation of heated or cooled air and with a filter for air cleaning. In the winter the air is humidified and in the summer it is dehumidified.

Capons Require Special Care Before Marketing

Where capons are being fattened for market they should be fed a regular growing ration and plenty of whole grain, which should be hopper fed. Clean quarters and range are important. Close confinement should be avoided. A clean open field with protection from the weather, such as that afforded by a good range shelter, is ideal.

During the last couple of weeks before marketing, it will pay to feed a wet mash twice a day consisting of growing mash and milk or whole grain soaked in milk in addition to the usual ration. Such feeding will improve the quality of the birds, but actual poundage is made by keeping them on a full and complete growing ration throughout the summer and fall months.

Worms should be strictly guarded against. Tapeworms in particular, since wormy capons simply refuse to get fat. If birds are wormy, they should be treated without fail. After which, they should be removed to a clean range.

Mulch of Pine Needles Reforests Eroded Field

Pine needle mulch can sometimes be used to reforest old fields or similar areas, experiments at the Southern Piedmont Soil Conservation Experiment station at Athens, Ga., show.

Seeking an economical way of seeding eroded areas, the station mulched four clay-galled plots with 900 pounds of pine straw, litter from adjacent woods. In five months a healthy mixed vegetation developed, including more than 1,600 shortleaf seedlings—an average of two seedlings from each pound of mulch.

The study will observe for several years the survival and height growth of the seedlings resulting from this mulch and inexpensive scattering pine-needle litter over the bare area to a depth of about one inch. If only one-fourth of the existing seedlings live for five years, the area will be well planted.
